The group was founded by Sarah Jones, a young woman who was raped and beaten by a group of men. After the police failed to catch her attackers, Jones decided to take matters into her own hands. She gathered a group of other women who had been 受害者 of violence and abuse, and together they began to patrol the streets of New York City.

Blood Roses has quickly gained a reputation for being a ruthless and effective crime-fighting force. The group has been responsible for apprehending numerous criminals, including rapists, murderers, and drug dealers. Blood Roses has also been credited with reducing the crime rate in the neighborhoods where they patrol.

However, the group's methods have also been criticized by some. Critics argue that Blood Roses is too violent and that their actions may be putting innocent people at risk. The group has also been accused of vigilantism, which is the practice of taking the law into one's own hands.
