Walpurgis Night, also known as Witches' Night, is a holiday celebrated in many parts of Europe on the night of April 30th. It is said to be a night when witches and other supernatural beings gather to celebrate the arrival of spring. The holiday is named after Saint Walpurga, a Benedictine abbess who died in 779 AD. Walpurga is said to have driven out the devil from a monastery in Germany, and she is often invoked for protection against witches.

History of Walpurgis Night

The origins of Walpurgis Night are pagan. The holiday is thought to have originated with the Celtic festival of Beltane, which was celebrated on May 1st. Beltane was a festival of fire and fertility, and it was believed that on this night the boundary between the human world and the supernatural world was blurred.

In the 8th century, Pope Gregory III declared May 1st to be a Christian feast day in honor of Saint Walpurga. Over time, the pagan traditions of Beltane became associated with the Christian holiday of Walpurgis Night.
